MEMORANDUM FOR: Director, [REDACTED]

SUBJECT : AG Reports on Foreign Perceptions of the U.S.-Soviet Strategic Relationship Under Detente

STATSPEC

There are three areas in which our regular [REDACTED] analyses or occasional supplementary reports may provide some contribution to a study of foreign perceptions of the U.S.-Soviet strategic relationship under detente.

STATSPEC

First, a number of our [REDACTED] articles and one supplementary report have examined the evidence of a debate between "hawk" and "dove" elements within the Soviet Union over the value of detente and how best to insure Soviet security. A description of the beginnings of the open controversy and some of the background necessary to understand it is presented in a supplementary report entitled "Soviet Debate Over Role of Military Power During Detente", a copy of which is attached.

STATSPEC

Second, [REDACTED] produced a number of special memoranda on European reactions to various U.S. actions or international developments last year which throw some light on European assessments of the U.S.-Soviet strategic relationship. These, as you know, were one-shot efforts which were not staffed to produce on a regular basis. Copies of these memoranda are attached. I hope they will be of some use.

STATSPEC

Finally, our regular [REDACTED] analyses of Chinese propaganda have focused sharply on Peking's view of the world strategic balance, which the Chinese see as a three-cornered struggle among the United States, the Soviet Union, and the third world. Examples include an article in the 31 October 1973 [REDACTED] which examined Chinese treatment of the U.S. military alert during the Middle East war and an article in the 5 June [REDACTED] which examined Chinese treatment of the U.S. diplomatic efforts to bring about the Arab-Israeli disengagement agreements.
